TOWISAWA ROWI

Siko

Free Translation

Towisawa Rowi went out into the forest. He was going to hunt, and he put on a kamata belt, which is like a modern belt.[21] He put on the belt, and he wrapped one end of the belt over the other.

The spider monkeys saw something, and they were calling. Towisawa was wearing the belt. He put on the belt. He tightened the belt. He pulled out some darts, and twirled the darts in his mouth. The monkeys could be heard, sio, sio, sio. A male monkey was excited. "Aa, aa, aa," it said. It was calling because of a jaguar.

He went. "The monkeys are going to be shot," he said.

The monkeys came toward where Towisawa was standing, excited. They were looking behind them. It didn't look around [toward Towisawa].

He shot a monkey. The monkey cried out. He took out some more darts. The monkey was excited, and put itself in danger. He shot it, and it cried out. We used to say that he wasn't looking around. The jaguar had seen Towisawa, and it was hunting him.

A monkey that he had shot fell to the ground. He took the young monkey off from its mother. The jaguar was standing there [hidden], watching him. It was standing there. The monkey fell. "Aha, my young spider monkey," he said.

He took off the young monkey from its mother. The young monkey cried. "Owee, owee, owee," the young monkey said.

A sound started up, kisiririri. The jaguar came running.

"Feee," he said. He hit it in the face with the young monkey. The jaguar didn't want the young monkey, and it fell to the side and lay there. It kept on after Towisawa. Towisawa threw it from back to front when it attacked him as he ran, and it fell in front of him. He pushed it away with his arms. It kept after him. After it fell, it came at him again. It clawed him where the belt was on his midsection, and almost bit the back of his neck.

There was a log lying across. He passed under the log with the jaguar. It fell off, because its face hit the log.

He ran. He went with it. He went with it to where his arrows were against a tree. It kept after him. The belt was on the ground. He took the belt off as he was running. The belt fell off when the jaguar was holding onto it.

He went running, he used to say. "I was running with the jaguar holding onto me. I am blowing snuff into you. Be careful," he said. "I encounter many jaguars in the forest."

He ran away with it. He took it to where the arrows were against a log. He picked up the arrows. It grabbed him along with the arrows. He pushed it away while holding the arrows. He moved over and stood in a different place. He quickly took out an arrow. It charged him again, and he pushed it away with the bow. It jumped away. He quickly put an arrow in the bow, and shot it, really close, saki. It cried out.

Towisawa was a good jaguar killer. Towisawa was big, but not as big as when he was a teenager. The pilot goes around here in the plane, he was big like Towisawa used to be.

21 The belt was made of bark of the kamata tree, and its function was to help the hunter to blow harder into the blowgun.

The jaguar went, wounded. "Haa, haa," it said as it went. It fell over. He had shot it in its side, near its front leg.

"Whew, it almost hurt me, but I hit it with an arrow. You should have been like me. I'm not like you. I saved myself. I didn't stay lying on the ground, I saved myself, I'm not an old man," he said. "If a jaguar grabs you, you won't be able to push it away," he used to say. "I ran with the jaguar, and it fell off. It went after me again, and I pushed it away, and it fell. I ran with it again. I went with it to where my arrows were against a log. I picked up the bunch of arrows, and it grabbed me with the arrows, Bato."

"Look at Towisawa." As he talked, we listened to him talking.

"If it gets you, you won't be able to kill it. I picked up the bunch of arrows. It grabbed me with the arrows, as I held the arrows hard. I pushed it away while holding onto the arrows. It fell. When it was about to attack again, I shot it with an arrow, up close. I had held onto the arrows. Because it was so close, the arrow point went way in. I had hit its lungs with the arrow."

"Haa, haa," it said, he said. It feels the effect right away. It sat down, and keeled over.

"Yee." He yelled out. The young spider monkey of the spider monkey that he had shot with his blowgun, the young monkey which he had thrown, had gone up into a tree, the one he had wanted to raise. "Humph, I'm going to go and get my monkey." He came back and got the monkey. "The male that I shot fell over there. I don't know, wait. The monkey came this way. There is a tree over there. I didn't hear the sound of the monkey falling. The monkey came this way. It must be lying over there."

Towisawa went, looking as he went. He looked. The monkey lay there. "There it is, it was lying there."

Its young was crying, sitting up high, at the place where he had thrown it. "You raise it," [he said to the other monkeys].

"I wanted to raise it, but I threw it because of the jaguar. It wouldn't die [in the village]. Now my monkey will be there in the tree." He went and picked up the monkey.

"If you aren't smart, and if you are not aware, the jaguar will kill you. You will not kill it," he used to say, "if you don't push it away quickly." Towisawa was talking as he blew snuff into me.

Another jaguar stood on its hind feet with me. I told about it. That one wasn't told about yet.

He came back. He came back carrying the monkeys on his back. He arrived back. "Whew." The middle of his belt was torn because of its claws, which were curved. His belt was torn. "My belt is ruined. Let it be ruined."

Towisawa used to say he saved himself. I guess the little monkey went up in a tree. Didn't you hear me? It sat up in the tree. "If I go up into the tree after the monkey, won't the jaguar come up the tree after me?" he thought, and he didn't go up into the tree after the monkey, he used to say. He said that because he was on the ground he could watch out.

Towisawa didn't marry a Jarawara woman. Towisawa married a Banawá. For this reason his children talked funny.

"I am coming home after being almost killed by a jaguar," he said.

I am remembering Towisawa, who used to tell about himself. "It gripped me tightly. I was wearing a belt. Its claws were curved. I ran with it. I ran. I am blowing snuff in you. Be careful. People shouldn't blow snuff into each other, but I am blowing snuff into you." This is why I met up with many jaguars. "I ran with the jaguar. I pushed the jaguar away, and it fell headlong. But I didn't fall headlong."

Towisawa was a big man. He said it fell headlong. He ran away, and went and picked up the bunch of arrows, he used to say. It came running, too, he used to say, and it grabbed at the arrows. He pushed it away while holding the arrows, and it fell. "My arms were strong, as I pushed the jaguar away. If you don't push the jaguar away, it will kill you. I pushed it away. I inserted an arrow that I had in the bow. It wanted to come at me again, and I shot it with the arrow in the side, behind its front leg. It cried out. I yelled, Bato."

"Look at Towisawa. If you hadn't had an arrow, would the jaguar have killed you?"

"It would not have killed me if I didn't have an arrow. You shouldn't talk about me being killed. I was careful, and I pushed it away. It died."

Then he came back, he used to say. "I hit the jaguar in the head with my little monkey. I am coming home after a jaguar grabbed me. The jaguar grasped me along with the belt I wear."

"Wabao, Kamiro, you won't be like me," his father used to say about his son.

Towisawa was Makowi. "The jaguar grasped me again. You didn't see it. I ran with it. There was the sound of the belt ripping as I went. The belt came apart as I went along. Because it was holding onto the belt, I ran as fast as I could. It came off. I came running back to where my bunch of arrows was against a log," he said. "I quickly picked up the arrows. It grabbed me again, and I pushed it away again, Bato."

"Towisawa, blow snuff into us. We want to shoot jaguars with arrows."

"I will blow snuff in you. I was careful. Don't say the name of the jaguar that got me. The jaguar's name shouldn't be said, Bato."

"I am going to say its name, but I will also be careful, Towisawa. I will shoot it in the face with an arrow." "If we see it well, it will be good."

"If we see it and it doesn't see us, it is good. It is shot with an arrow," he said. "It is good if we see it and it doesn't know we are there, when it comes toward us we shoot it with an arrow," he said.

"I shot it with an arrow, Bato. Listen to what I am saying. I went out into the forest. I hunted. I went hunting. I went, and I saw something. A jaguar was eating a tapir."

It was eating a tapir. It came, and he used to say he saw it as it came down to drink water. Its tapir was lying there. It had killed a tapir, and was eating the tapir. It came to drink water. Kisiririri. He looked around. It came. It was looking down, with its stomach full. It came. He took out an arrow, and he put the arrow quietly on the ground. It came as he waited for it. It was after the pond. When it was going to come down to the water, he shot it with an arrow, he used to say. It jumped. "Yee," he said. It's stomach was full. It went off slowly. It went off slowly, and fell.

"Shoot the jaguar with an arrow. The jaguar will not run away," he said. "It will feel the effect of the arrow right away."

"It fell. I shot it with an arrow behind its front leg. Because the point of the arrow was deep inside it, it staggered around," he said. "It fell. 'Should I skin it? Let it rot,' I thought. I left it there."

"When I went out another time, one was coming with a tapir." A voice could be heard coming. "Oooo ooo oo oo," the sound went, Towisawa said. He thought it was people playing. The voice could be heard coming. There were also sounds. The sounds came, Towisawa used to say. Kobo foti foti foti foti foti.[22] The tapir could be heard coming, "Fiya, fiya, fiya." The jaguar was holding on, Towisawa used to say, behind the tapir's front leg. It was gnawing at the tapir's neck, he used to say. He didn't want to shoot the tapir, he used to say. The tapir escaped, because the jaguar was on the same side that he was on. He shot the jaguar with an arrow. It died.

He went. The tapir was tired out, and he went. "Wait, the tapir is tired out, and it went to bathe," Towisawa used to say he thought. "I'm going to go take a look at it. I don't think the tapir left so quickly." Towisawa went there. As he was going, the sound came to him, kisi, tefei, tefei, 22 These are the sounds of the tapir trying to jump away from the jaguar, kobo being steps on wood and foti steps on the ground.

tefei.[23] "That must be the sound of it." He thought it was the sound of it sprawling and stamping, because the jaguar had bit its neck, he used to say.

He went after the tapir. He went, and saw it going up the bank. It went up. It had finished bathing and went up. It stopped and stood there. He went after it. He circled around. "The tapir was here," Towisawa said.

"Fii," Towisawa whistled.

"Fii."

"Fii," he whistled. "There it is."

It came, Towisawa used to say. The jaguar had tired it out, and it had bathed, and when it came he shot it with an arrow.

"The jaguar didn't eat it, but I ate it after it came."

It came. Its neck was all gashed from the jaguar. The jaguar had gnawed on its neck. It had jaguar claw wounds all over it, he used to say.

"I finally shot it with an arrow. We ate it instead of the jaguar eating it. I shot the tapir with an arrow, and it died. I came back after the others. We cut up the tapir. 'The jaguar killed this tapir. Its jaguar is lying on the ground over there.'"

"'What about it?'"

"'Let it lie there. The tapir's jaguar is lying there, I shot it with an arrow. Let it die.'"

Then Towisawa came back, he used to say. He came back and got the others, and took them out there. It was late afternoon when they cut up the tapir. They cut up the whole animal.

"Hoo, my older brother shot a tapir with an arrow late in the day."

He cut up the tapir, and distributed the pieces. He distributed the pieces of the tapir, and they put them in their baskets. They put the pieces of the tapir in their baskets, and they came running back. They came running back, and they arrived back.

"I saved the tapir that the jaguar was going to kill, and then I shot it with an arrow, too. We will eat it," he used to say he said. "I saved it. I shot the jaguar that was attacking alongside of it, Bato."

"Towisawa is really something."

"I was really something, Bato. It was attacking, holding onto the tapir's sides, and I shot it with an arrow." He said the tapir kept turning its head away, as it was clawing its neck. He used to say its claw wounds were big, where it held onto the tapir. "It almost killed it, and I saved it. Then we ate it." They were ready, and they ate it. "I am telling about the fat tapir that I shot with an arrow, and we ate," he said. He told about it when we were not adults yet. I am telling about the one he told about when we were not yet adults.

Has anyone told about the cougar that grabbed my father?
