Note: At various points Siko's wife Amoro interjects comments, which I have not tried to transcribe. The story is probably originally from Amoro's people, the Wa Yafi people, and Siko probably learned it from Amoro.

Hoka lay sick in his hammock for a long time. His son was helping him and taking care of him. The son wasn't sleeping.

"Don't keep my father's fire going. Don't keep the fire going. I'm going to sleep. You're not going to take care of my father," he said. [He wanted them to take care of his father, but he knew they wouldn't.] "My father said he is going to burn his shaman's stone, I heard him," his son said. "When I am sleeping, you won't be able to keep us all from getting sick."

Then they went to sleep.

They slept. A little boy lit his grandfathers fire again [at the grandfather's request]. He unwittingly burned his grandfather's shaman's stone [which the grandfather had sneaked into the fire], and he lay next to the fire, dead. His grandfather had burned his shaman's stone. A man who had been sitting warming himself in the fire also lay dead next to the fire. He died. Was it his father?

The son woke up and criticized them. There was a lot of smoke. A sickness came to them right away as they were sleeping. The smoke was inside the longhouse. They woke up and moved out. The moved out during the night and went. They were dying as they walked along on the trail.

The son was standing in the smoke, and could be heard speaking. "I don't want to get sick. Younger brother, I am your older brother," he said.

They died. They were calling out [for the others] as they went in the forest. They were dying.

Morning came. He dug a grave for his father, and buried his father. His wife died, and his sons died, too. He buried his father. I think he still lived there. Who knows? He survived. He went upstream, grieving. He went grieving. She survived. Yes, he took along his wife, who had survived. She had survived, and he took her along, and had children. He had children. He had a shaman's stone, and he was stronger than all of them. They all died.

They still live in the same place they were living. Some lived in one place, others in another place. He went to their relatives, who were scattered. He went, and stayed there with them. Those other ones died, and rotted, all of them. They didn't survive. They all died.
