Their old men fished, setting fish traps. They went in many different directions in canoes of kanawa bark. They went and fished. They were standing there on the bank, fishing.

Fa Ki Ra's son began to cry. "Father, I'm hungry. Let's go home."

They got ready to leave, and he called the others. "Hey," he said. "Hey. We are going back. My son says he is hungry," he said.

"All right, you go on ahead," Fa Ki Ra's brothers-in-law said.

"Let's go. You say you are hungry."

So they came back. They were coming back.

"There is a genip tree there with fruit. I'm going to climb to get genip fruits. You stay here in the canoe. Watch me."

His son stayed in the canoe. He climbed up. He picked some genip fruits that were near the trunk, and he threw the genip fruits down. The genip fruits plopped in the water.

"Father, can I eat them?"

"Yes, eat them."

As he was in the canoe eating genip fruits, he heard his father speaking. "I'm going to jump to get some genip fruits that are hanging a ways out."

"Right," the boy said.

He jumped. He grabbed onto a limb of the genip tree.

"I'm going to hang," he said, but the genip branch broke. "Oh-oh," he said.

He fell through the branches, korii. The koko ducks made a lot of noise all over. He disappeared. Fa Ki Ra disappeared.

His son began to cry. "My father went in the water. My father, my father, father," his son said.

His uncle and the others called to each other. They came back. "Come on, Fa Ki Ra and his son have gone back. Fa Ki Ra has left us behind."

They came in the canoes. They all paddled. They heard his son crying. "My father, my father, father," the boy was saying, crying.

"Wai came back, and his son is there crying. He fell in the water."

They came upon the boy crying. "What happened to you that you are crying?" his uncle said.

"My father fell in the water."

"Where?"

"My father fell in the water over there."

His uncle cut two poles, and poked for him. He poked for his brother-in-law.

"Grab onto the pole, Fa Ki Ra."

He didn't grab onto the pole. He had gone and sat on the end of a fish trap. He went there swimming. His son didn't see him going. He went there.

When the sun went down they gave up on him. "Oh well, let Wai [another name for Fa Ki Ra] die. Let's go, let him die." They left him behind.

"Put the boy in the other canoe."

His uncle put the child in the other canoe, and paddled him.

"We have been setting fish traps many times, and now he fell in the water. Let him die." They went on. He came in the canoe. Then they came upon Wai sitting there. Wai was sitting there facing them.

"Look, there sits Wai."

"Rororoooo." As Wai sat there and they exclaimed about him, he imitated them.

"Your canoe is back there in the water. Get in."

They put him in the canoe. His brother-in-law put him in the canoe, and paddled him.

They were taking the fish out of the traps as they came along. Bringing the fish they arrived back at the port. Then they brought the fish on the trail to the village.

They were grating fowe tubers. They were grating fowe tubers to make mash, the women. The women grated fowe tubers. They squeezed the fowe mash in kanimaro squeezers, and toasted it. They cooked the fish in ceramic pots, and then they ate. They told about him to his wife, that he had fallen in the water.

She made broth of it the next morning.⁸¹ He lay in his hammock. Later she called him. "Call me so that I can eat my broth."

She called him. She was preparing the broth. She took the broth off the fire. She called him. "Wati," she said. "Wati."

"Huh?"

"Your broth."

"Where?"

He quickly got out of the hammock. He came. She fanned the broth as she was holding the broth in a taro shell.

"All right," he said. He sat right down.

"It's hot," she said.

He filled his mouth with the broth. He swallowed the broth.

"It's hot, Wati."

"If it were hot, his throat would be burned," he said.

He went back speaking and lay down in his hammock again.

"He filled his mouth with something really hot, and then went back and lay in his hammock again," she said.'

rororooo interj

⁸² In this sentence and until sentence (78), there is feminine agreement with Wai. Apparently this is because the men were laughing at him.

"Rororoooo."
